At a cross-roads, as they went swiftly on, she saw the old sorrel horse, the rattiliag wagon, and John with his family driving homeward. She drew back with a little cry, fearing he might see her and stop the train, but they went on so fast that could not be and the old horse jogged into the woods, and John never thought his old Aunt Hannah, his charge for twenty long years, was running away.

At Boston a kindly conductor bought her a through ticket to Denver. "Its a long journey for an old lady like you." he said.

"But I'm peart for my age" she said anxiously; "I never had a day's sickness since I was a gal."

"Going all the way alone?"

"With Providence," she answered brightly, alert, eager to help herself but silent and thoughtful as the train took her into strange landscapes where the miles went so swiftly that it seemed like past years of her life as she looked back on them.

In the day coach the people were kind and generous, sharing their lunch with her seeing she changed cars all right and her carpet bag was safe. She tended babies for tired women and talked to the men of farming and crops, or told the children Bible stories. I can."

Tired and worn by nights in the uncomfortable seats, her brave spirit began to fail a little.

As the days wore on, and still the monotoonus land showed no human habitation, no oasis of green, her eyes dimmed, something like a sob rose under the black kerchief on the bowed shoulders, and the spectacles were taken off with a trembling hand and put away carefully in the worn tin
